LET'S MEET IN LISBOA

"Cultural, cutting edge and full of character: the Portuguese capital lays on centuries of history, then throws in barrios that bubble with bohemian flair and forward-thinking projects such as the transformation of neglected buildings by large-scale urban artworks [...]"

© Independent / Sophie Lam – 48 Hours: Lisbon

"Meander up one of Lisbon's loftiest hills to the Moorish Alfama neighbourhood, where sunset-amber walls and dusty lanes orbit the Arabic-cum-medieval castle that looms, omnipresent, over the terracotta rooftops of the city below. At the imperial Belém waterfront, Portugal's "Age of Discoveries" is celebrated in the form of a lavish monastery and dazzling river-facing statues, built with the coin of one of the most ostentatious colonial empires in history. [...]"

"I wandered into the hills of Alfama, sans map. Later I learned that everything was a straight shot from my hostel, but I didn't care. Getting lost alone in those windy and narrow streets was a dream. Finding the landmarks and seeing the magical view by just following my intuition was far more appealing than analyzing a map. [...]"

© Huffington Post / Sonya Matejko – Why Lisbon Changed My Mind About Traveling Alone

"Beautiful decay seems to characterise the aesthetic of most of Lisbon's nightlife quarters. But despite the faded facades and vacant lots that scatter the Portuguese capital, the music emerging from between the cracks is sharp and modern, fusing contemporary African and European influences with a playful fluency unique to the city. [...]"

Olá!

Politécnico de Lisboa is a high-level institution of higher education whose aim is to create, convey and disseminate knowledge, culture, arts, science and technology of a professional nature by integrating study, lecturing, research and experimental development.

Internationalization is a strategic and evolving focal point at Politécnico de Lisboa. We strive to project an international image through strengthening our existing partnerships and seeking out new forms of international cooperation.

We want to contribute to prepare community-minded citizens who have a wide general knowledge of the world and who are able to live and work in a global market.

Nowadays, our students, teachers, or staff members can choose among approximately 400 high-level partner institutions for his or her mobility experience, and we receive around 500 people, each year, regarding this partnerships.

In the area of research, development and artistic creation, IPL supports participation in international projects, facilitated by its presence in various prestigious international networks.

We believe that internationalization contributes to improve skills and to expand international recognition of our institution in the global market of knowledge and arts.

At IPL – Politécnico de Lisboa we believe in internationalization as an institutional imperative and a powerful instrument for reflection for the ongoing enhancement of our commitment and for the defining of our own identity.
